AN IMMEDIATE NEED.

While we are conserving all our energies, saving our food supply, working every cent of our money to ensure the prosecution of this war we are entering into, right here at home is a problem that confronts us that must be solved if we are to maintain our position as a producing community. It was brought out by one of the speakers at the mass meeting at the Myers theatre last Friday, a Mr. Thompson, who spoke from the viewpoint of the soldier, and his ideas have gone home to many a hearer. That is the housing of our citizens and the sanitary conditions that surround a great mass of our population.

It is all right to attempt to stop an epidemic by scraping a few germs from some other base into the gutter or into a number of drops of serum and call it a preventive, but why not go back to the source of contagion and stop it at its breeding place? Certainly the modern (topian) community would not permit many of the pest holes, called "homes," to exist in their midst and laws would be enacted to eradicate them and let fresh air and sunlight, tear down old ramshackle structures and erect new buildings. Prohibit by law unsanitary conditions that breed contagion, and compel owners of property of this sort to live up to the law or pay the penalty.

One of the first steps in this direction would be the employment of an expert in sanitation and contagion. Dr. Burkmaster, our present health officer, is paid but a pittance for the work he does. Compelled to inspect cases of contagion, superintendent of the work, he is given the paltry wage of five hundred a year for work that in any other community would be worth twice that amount, and would also give him an assistant to do the actual work.

His powers are limited just as his salary is small. He does his work and does it well, but he should be at the head of a department that has the sum at its disposal and absolute powers. Beloit has just arranged to pay some twenty-five hundred dollars for a sanitary expert. Madison has long maintained a health physician and a health officer, both paid adequately for their work. Ordinances in these cities named have been enacted and local health officers have been building ordinances or for permitting property used for dwellings, to become unsanitary.

We read with horror of the conditions in Europe, of the prison camps. We dread to send our boys to the government training camps. We are compelled to contribute to the relief of government of this country and the powers that are given them; let us go further and protect the people who are unable to protect themselves by law enactments and pay men living wages for doing so. Brains cost money and Janesville should have a health department on a par to its various branches of civic government.

We may stamp out disease by present methods, but it is a long, hard, tedious and unsatisfactory way. All the contagion in the world may lurk in some hidden place to break out abroad even though every arm in town be scratched and tons of serum injected. We boast of our progressive form of government and of this country and the powers that are given them; let us go further and protect the people who are unable to protect themselves by law enactments and pay men living wages for doing so. Brains cost money and Janesville should have a health department on a par to its various branches of civic government.

A stenographer can run the water department, perhaps, but it takes a student versed in disease, a man who is trained by careful teachers and an authority by experience to diagnose contagion and its causes. Mr. Grampke hit the nail on the head, and while a stenographer is taken by a health officer, a plumbing inspector and visiting nurse, let us go further and place at the head of this health department a man paid sufficient salary so that he can devote all his energy and time to the important office he holds and back him up with ordinances that give him power to order down property and see that penalties are inflicted upon owners of unsanitary dwellings, regardless of fear or favor to those "higher up."

ARE THINKING.

That the voters are thinking for themselves these days and not permitting the leaders of the movement to change the city government to make them the monkeys to pull the chestnuts out of the fire for them, is shown more clearly day by day. Like the German propaganda that is being spread most industriously throughout this nation, so the magnifying of the petty mistakes of some of the actions of the present council, has gone forth. It is hard to combat all these tales, but the Gazette has confidence in the citizens of Janesville, to decide for themselves and to wish to return to the old system that they decided so decisively six years ago was not suited to the community or retain the present method of commission form that has demonstrated its worth and value to property-owners and taxpayers since its adoption.

Leaving the merits and demerits of the proposed change out of consideration, citizens are generally discussing who will be the next mayor, for a candidate for this office is to be selected at the primaries in March. Many names have been mentioned. George McKee's is among the latest to be discussed. William Langdon, who ran for commissioner two years ago is also talked of. George Bennett's name is also mentioned. Changing the name is suggested. John M. Whitehead, speaker of the Thomas P. Welsh and Orville Morse are also suggested despite the instant denial of both gentlemen they would consider the office. So it goes. Lucius Vowles, J. J. Dulin, George Sutherland and others have been talked of and of course the present mayor, James A. Patthers. Still the suggestion of the numerous candidates evidence that the people are doing their own thinking and not taking seriously this idea of changing the present form of government. The majority of ways rules. That is the fundamental principle of democracy. If we were all of one mind this would be an ideal world and we would wonder why they talked of the Garden of Eden.

However, the friends of the commission form of government must not feel confident of the success of their cause by this talk. It will need every aid and every energy to combat the influences that are at work to bring about the change. These men who meet secretly and plot to wipe out a government because of a personal grievance against individuals and then seek to arouse the voters to aid them. When the conspirators who stabbed the great Caesar to death at the foot of the statue of Pompey, in ancient Rome, terrorized Rome, there was one man who stood up—Marcus Anthony—and said: "I come to bury Caesar, not to praise him," and yet so turned the will of the fickle people by his speech, that they turned and drove out those who would have ruled.

Every story told and magnified of the misconduct of public affairs can not be sifted out before election, but the majority will be. It remains now with the voters to see what they will decide. As stated before, majority rules, but it is hoped the majority will be piled up on the right side of the special election day next Tuesday.

WHERE THE PINCH COMES.

Secretary Baker said very truly in his testimony the other day, that shipping is the crux of the whole war situation. The submarines just now are sinking ships of all countries at the rate of 4,000,000 tons a year. The shipping board has promised to build 4,000,000 tons in 1918. But any one who thinks they can do it with the labor force they have now, or are likely to get soon, must be an optimist. We will build 3,000,000 tons this year, and England will build 1,500,000 to 2,000,000. That will leave us a net gain unless more ships are sunk, which is quite possible. But to carry over our great army and keep it supplied, we need many more ships than seem likely to be built in 1918. As Secretary Baker says, we can supply our troops if we can get ships to carry the stuff.

Primarily it is a problem of getting the labor. We should have realized earlier in the game that workers must have places to live in near the shipyards. The building of houses and comfortable barracks for working people must be rushed, even if many kinds of construction are forced to stop. As there are not trained shipbuilders enough in the country, a great force of mechanics who know nothing of shipbuilding must be brought into this trade. The companies should not wait until they are ready to put on a gang of men, and then have the work held up for months while these men are broken into the trade. They should be given training in advance of the time when they are wanted, so that when they are put on they will not be wholly green at the job.

Every person, be he a house painter or a laborer that can help find or train workers for this job will help to shorten the war.

People who fear that the government will get inextricably tangled up in its war business, will remember that Col. House is only five hours distant from New York.

The Germans have strictly kept their pledge not to transfer their troops to the western front, as the soldiers are sent home for a 24 hours' furlough before going there.

When a country gets the idea that it is necessary to have a war every few years in order to be prosperous, the only way is to give that country all the war it wants and then some.

The rewards of statesmanship seem bitterly disappointing to some politicians who find they must now either walk or pay railroad fare.

After hearing the Lincoln day speaker tell them how any poor boy can rise, some youngsters go home and decide it is too cold to saw wood.

Perhaps they would like it better in Germany, where they wouldn't be bothered a bit by solicitors in their secure retreat in a jail cell.

The Congressmen expect that the garden seeds about to be distributed will at least raise a crop of votes next November.

The hoboes will feel that the government broke faith with them, if it decided not to have any more idle Mondays.

The first step taken in the campaign to promote the eating of fish was to make a big increase in the price.

Some people are getting ready for the next Liberty Loan bond campaign by planning to be out when the solicitors call.

Just Folks

MERCY
 There never was a man so good
 But could be better if he would;
 There never was a man so bad
 But what a chance for good he had.
 And since no one can truly say
 What he shall do another day,
 Or shall he rise or shall he fall,
 Mercy should govern one and all.

Have fallen from the heights, disgraced
 And others, weak, despised and lowly
 Have earned the rites of burial holy.

Praise God whenever good you see,
 But patient with the sinful be;
 The eyes of men may never learn
 Just how the work of fate may turn,
 Nor can we guess what life may be
 Tomorrow here with me and you.
 Be merciful! Some day we may
 For mercy sadly kneel and pray.

BREAD RATION HAS LITTLE EFFECT ON LOCAL RESTAURANTS

War Bread Now to Be Sold at Ten Cents a Loaf or Same as the Wheat Bread.

The Food Administration's recent order limiting the amount of bread issued each patron of hotels, restaurants and dining cars to two ounces will not have much effect on the service of the local restaurants, according to opinion of practically all owners or managers. No notice has been received by the local restaurants of the order but it will follow the instructions of the food administrators which were issued through this medium.

The following opinions were given on this subject by the Grand Hotel: "The new regulations will have very little effect on our service as we use only bread of which the greater part is of some substitute. Bread we serve wouldn't run over two ounces anyway."

Myers hotel: "We have received no notice of this ruling but wouldn't make much difference as we use many substitutes."

McDonald's: "Doesn't make any difference to us, as we have been using substitutes for some time. Besides this we use all of the substitutes which the government asks restaurants to use."

Savoy: "We have received no notice of the order but are following the newspaper reports. The order doesn't make any difference in the amount of bread we serve but it makes some change in the size of the loaves."

Tea Bell: "It makes no difference in the bread we serve but we had to cut down on the rolls. We are taking the six ounce portions and the four ounce portions and the four ounce portions and the four ounce portions."

Apollo: "The new ruling doesn't affect us in the least as we are selling no wheat bread at all. We serve only substitutes."

Commercial: "Doesn't make much difference as we serve substitutes mostly and no more than this amount anyway."

Commercial: "Makes very little difference to us as we observe all wheatless meals and on others only serve white bread when especially asked for."

Liberty Bread, or more familiarly known as War Bread, has today taken a jump of one cent per sixteen ounce loaf, which makes this bread the same price as the regular white bread. The rapid rise of the price of substitutes is the reason given by Beninson and Lane's and Colvin's bakeries for the advance.

"The wheat flour substitutes are now considerably higher in price than the all-wheat flour," said J. E. Lane, president of the Beninson and Lane bakery, when interviewed. "Our regulations on the wheat bread substitutes and the enormous demand for them since the food administration put the price of wheat bread at one cent."

Gehrke's bakery has not yet put out Liberty Bread at ten cents, but Mr. Gehrke is thinking of doing so. E. J. Reilly said that he had always taken ten cents for the wheat bread and would not make any difference to him.

War bread advanced in price in Chicago last week and the same reason was given by those bakers.

No Mystery in Oleomargarine

Armour and Company Take Public Into Their Confidence and Tell Ingredients of Two Important Products

Chicago, Feb. 18.—A department manager of Armour and Company paid a high compliment to the good judgement of the American people when interviewed in his office on the subject of the new Veribest Oleomargarine. "Armour and Company," he said, "have reached the position they occupy in the food world through a firm belief in the native good sense and good judgement of the American people. If we have gained special prominence as food manufacturers, it is because we have followed a consistent policy of laying our cards face up on the table and leaving the decision to the general public."

"As an example, look at the tremendous success of our two new products, Veribest Oleomargarine and Veribest Corned Beef. We have introduced these new foods, we laid no claim to supernatural powers, mysterious formulas, or scientific discovery. On the contrary, we told the public frankly and Veribest Oleomargarine was made of what we didn't claim the discovery of Nut-Ola, the vegetable oleomargarine, but admitted voluntarily that we imported not only the fat but the actual churning and the men to operate them from Holland where the nut-oleomargarine industry had reached a state of high development."

"Therefore, lies the success. And with an export of dairy products thirteen times greater during 1917 than the average for the three years previous, we saw the necessity of supplying alternatives. And so we produced the best oleomargarine it is possible to manufacture. The result has been a 60 per cent increase in the sales of this department."

"The public has shown its confidence upon to buy best quality every time."

A TEDDY

(In honor of Col. Roosevelt)
 A "Teddy" she called him, this little one in France
 Who sent an American soldier by chance
 Walking along the way
 Lingered very close and gay.
 It brought the smiles to her little tear-stained face,
 And she left away the sorrow—'tho' it left a trace.

Of suffering, (Ah, that one so little has to suffer and woe!)
 "God have mercy on us all, here below!"

But the soldier boy in khaki on duty bend in France
 Brought pleasure to a little heart by the merest chance.
 For the name of "Teddy" bears nations' wide renown.

It stands for courage undaunted that it naught of evil can down;
 It stands for help and comfort to Nations that are bent
 "Neath the yoke of a Ruler who thus ruthless doth wend
 The secret of his kingdom in warfare brutal with lust
 Who deems he is next to God Almighty and just.

But the "Teddies" they are coming to tear the crown from off his head,
 And they won't cease to fight 'till every last Hun is dead.
 Then let us all them "Teddies" our dear boys in France,
 For it may bring smiles and joy to little hearts and cheer
 "Hurrah for the 'Teddies' for our boys in khaki!
 Who shine to the sunshine to the little ones over the sea.

MARY E. McBAIN.

Announcing a Great Lecture

For The Benefit of Blind and Wounded Italian Soldiers

MYERS THEATRE
Monday Evening, March 4th

CHARLES UPSON CLARK
of the American Academy in Rome Will Lecture About

FIGHTING ABOVE THE CLOUDS

(Italy's Part in the War)

Illustrated with slides and marvelous motion pictures.

Mr. Clark has visited Goritz, Monfalcone, the Carso, the Bainsizza plateau, the Zagarm Pass opposite Monte Nero, and other points on the Isonzo front; the Asiago plateau and the Monte Pasubio on the Trentino front, and Venice, and has first hand knowledge of war conditions in these places.

To illustrate his lectures, Mr. Clark has brought with him not only slides made from hitherto inaccessible photographs, but he will have motion pictures that have never been shown in America, motion pictures prepared especially for him by the Italian Government. The beauty of these official Italian pictures is already well known in America, especially those pictures of the fighting in the high Alps.

Mr. Clark comes to raise money for relief work and all the proceeds of his tour will be devoted to aiding Italian blind and maimed soldiers, as he will continue to receive his salary from the American Academy in Rome. This has a most worthy object in view and should receive hearty support.

Heart and Home Problems

LETTERS MAY BE ADDRESSED TO MRS. THOMPSON IN CARE OF THE GAZETTE

Dear Mrs. Thompson: Do you think it is wrong for a girl to go with a young man two or three years younger than herself? We are not going to get together as friends so that I can be company and have fun.

DOROTHY.
It is all right for a girl to go with a boy two or three years younger than herself, but in her friendship she should be sure that she is not permitting the boy to care too much. She should not be selfish and only go with him for the sake of having company.

Dear Mrs. Thompson: (1) I am a girl of eighteen years nearly nineteen. I have light hair, blue eyes and a fair complexion and am considered good looking. I try to be just as sweet and good as I can be, and have managed to keep my soul clean. I think I go with one boy who is very nice and gentlemanly. We go to moving picture shows and church on Sundays. Do you think it is wrong?

(2) I have some girl friends who make fun of me because I don't go to public dances and the skating rink. They say I am modest and such a sweet little girl. What shall I do to make these girls stop making fun of me? It makes me feel so badly I sometimes cry. I just can't help it.

(3) Do you think I ought to start going to dances and skating rink with my father objects? I have no mother to go to for advice and I don't want to spoil my name. My father don't object to my going with now. Do you think it is wrong?

Her Great Adventure

by Zoe Beckley

LIFE'S NEW VISTA.
Whitney's nonchalant announcement that Claire was to dine with him at the Kozzy Kitchen left Claire for an instant breathless. She had been so used to seeing Whitney at the Kozzy Kitchen, but she had never seen him there before. She had been so used to seeing Whitney at the Kozzy Kitchen, but she had never seen him there before.

Then in a flash it swept over her that it was gone—that she had lost her old problems. And the new ones were already touched with the red of adventure. Here was Whitney, her father's friend, her employer, not asking, but announcing that they should dine at the Kozzy Kitchen. This name no longer conjured up visions of a smiling waiter and a loved being "conspired."

Claire stopped thinking. She let herself float. She lounged for at least a temporary cessation of responsibility. She who had never had a valentine from a high school lad was about to enter the charmed garden of romance. At least a special invitation to dine with Whitney at the Kozzy Kitchen for she didn't know where it was nor what it was nor what new vista of life might open to her eyes. They walked on down a way, their street began to grow twisty and narrow. Whitney's gay spirits rubbed off onto Claire. By the time they reached the plain old-fashioned building the basement of which housed the Kozzy Kitchen, Claire felt as if she had drunk of some mysterious fairy wine.

Lighted windows, electrically white-draped tables and palm-topped chairs. It was a wide front room of what had been once a beautiful stately home. There were no chairs at all on the small tables, except little squares of blue and orange linen as centerpieces on which sat squat salt and pepper shakers of odd shapes and colors. The room was candle-lighted and had a big fireplace of logs under an old marble mantel. Through the constantly-swinging door, Claire caught glimpses of a big kitchen out back, from which came odors of good and simple food.

Whitney greeted her or three persons as he and Claire came in, and chose a table well to the back in a corner. Claire thrilled again. They revolved in their chairs. When it came time to order Whitney got permission to light his friendly old pipe, leaned back and asked with a comfortable grin, "Well, how do you like it?"

"Most wonderful picnic I ever went to," said Claire merrily.

"That's it," grinned Whitney, "a picnic—you've hit it. Make life a picnic and you double the fun and half the grief. This dinner up-town, worse cooked, would cost three times as much. With tablecloths off, haphazard service (guests running out to the kitchen to get their own coffee, etc.), and the waiter can't take care of 'em all, paper napkins, no useless plates and no music to drive you crazy, the folks who run it can give it to us at a third of the price. Isn't it all interesting?"

Claire's simple "indeed—indeed it is" was convincing.

"Well, it's the same with your boarding place, isn't it?" Whitney asked.

"Yes, it is," said Claire. "You're paying about 40% of your $11 a week for a social atmosphere! The service is fine at Mrs. Tennant's. I used to know a chap that lived here. But it's necessary? Why don't you hunt out a little dingy of your own? Stick $20 worth of second-hand furniture into it, put a twig in a copper bowl and a splash of color on the couch and you've a better looking place than your proper little room on the top floor back. I'll bet a pipe! You'd have to dust your own bureau and keep the gas-stove clean. It's tidy."

Whitney with a large dismissing wave of his hand, "but what's that compared to the fun and independence you'll get out of it?"

Claire was staring now. Elbows on table, chin in hand, eyes bright and shining visions as they gazed past Whitney into space.

Vitality Extravaganza.
Are you one of those people who count vitality as a thing to be desired? There are a great many kinds of extravaganzas in this world besides the prodigality of money, which is the first thought that comes to one's mind at the call of that word.

And one of the worst is the vitality extravagance—the overspending of one's strength income.

Rheumatism's Torturing Pangs

Become More Severe Each Day

Winty Weather Foretells Much Suffering Ahead for the Afflicted.

The little pain demons which cause Rheumatism seem to lie dormant in mild weather, but with the first return of the raw, wintry blasts they break out with renewed fury, and start forth on their joyful tour of torture.

Then you remember how the disease first attacked you. The little pains seemed very slight at first, for Rheumatism is an insidious disease, and creeps up on its victim unawares. You hardly noticed the little twinging pains, for they barely attracted your attention. But they began to become more frequent, and just a little bit more painful and annoying each day.

And then, before you hardly realized it, you found yourself almost bound and fast in the grasp of one of the most disabling diseases that afflicts mankind, a full-fledged victim of rheumatism, with its aches and its pains for your constant companion.

And now the real important question with you is how to shake loose from these millions of little pain demons that cause you so much suffering. Your experience has proven to you that no real permanent benefit can be expected from the use of liniments and lotions, for, try as you will, you will never be able to rub the pain away. No externally applied remedy can stop such sharp shooting pains, for they must be reached at their source.

Many forms of Rheumatism originate in a disordered state of the blood, and the logical method of treatment is one that thoroughly purifies the blood and cleanses it of all foreign substances that have infected it. Some very obstinate and painful cases of Rheumatism have yielded to S. S. S., the great vegetable blood purifier, and no case should be considered incurable, just because it is not reached by local remedies applied to the surface.

You should give S. S. S. a thorough trial, and if your Rheumatism comes from a disordered state of the blood, you will be delighted with the results, and soon find yourself on the way back to health. Go to your drug store and get a bottle of S. S. S. today, and begin at once on this splendid treatment. If you wish any medical advice, you can obtain same without cost by writing to Medical Director, Swift Specific Co., 82 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga.

A mother should announce her daughter's broken engagement at once to their most intimate friends, either verbally or by note. The friends should be very careful never to allude to it in the presence of the young lady.

Mrs. N. J.: A lady should always appear in street clothes in the dining room of a hotel for breakfast. She need not wear wraps, but she must be suitably dressed for public appearance. SUGAR AND CHILDREN

More than half of the solid matter in a baby's natural food is sugar—sugar of milk. Consequently we hold that children need and must have a liberal ration of sugar or sweets in or with or immediately following their regular food, not at irregular times between meals. The sugar, for older children, may be in the form of cakes, pure candies, or best of all, brown butter. The belief that "sugar makes worms" is unworthy of a moment's consideration by any intelligent parent.

But, just because Old Doctor Nature gives the wee wee babies lots of sugar, don't jump to the conclusion that a baby can be raised on an all-sugar diet.

Certain signs point strongly to the ill effects of sugar feeding in a bottle baby, and we briefly list these signs for the information of mothers:

When the sugars are fed in excess the bowel movements are apt to be scanty, the irritability (coughs, fermenting to acids), watery, frequent and brownish like thin mustard. The reduction of the amount of sugar in the feeding formula to the addition of a little oatmeal or cereal to the food, will relieve this.

Sugar, either cane sugar (sucrose) or malt sugar (maltose), in excess, is the real cause of the baby's ailments. The baby is likely to be anemic and rickets is likely to occur. Sugar in considerable amount is really digestible by the young baby, and it is probably why Old Doctor Nature uses it to make up over half of the bulk of his formula.

But the mere digestibility of a given food is no criterion to employ in determining the suitable diet for a baby. Babies fed on food containing an excess of the sugars are noticeable more subject to the acute acid intoxication (sometimes called acute intestinal indigestion) which the granules use, well, they do do) consider the sure indication of "worms."

Certified milk, or if that is unobtainable, then a fresh raw milk produced and handled under clean conditions, under the supervision of the health authorities, constitutes a splendid substitute for breast feeding.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

The Dentist's Advice.

My dentist had an X-ray photograph made of my jaw, which shows one tooth requires treatment for infection at the root. As these teeth have not troubled me, I am worried. What should I do?

Answer—Your dentist has told you what you should do. The tooth is trouble you later, either locally or by causing some serious systemic trouble, like "rheumatism."

Cancer of the Lip.

Is there any cure for it besides operation? Would X-rays help it?

Answer—There is no reason to believe cancer is contagious. Ordinary cleanliness is all the precaution necessary. There is no known cure for cancer but surgery. After the surgical removal of cancer, any and all treatment with direct X-ray exposure is certainly wise to have the scar rayed as a means of preventing recurrence.

CHAPTER XV.

King Karl.

"They love us dearly," said King Karl.

The chancellor, who sat beside him in the royal carriage, shrugged his shoulders. "They have had little reason to love, in the past, majesty," he said briefly.

Karl laughed, and watched the crowd. He and the chancellor rode alone, Karl's entourage, a very modest one, following in another carriage. There was no military escort, no pomp. It had been felt unwise. Karl, paying ostensibly a visit of sympathy, had come unobtrusively.

The chancellor was not so calm as he appeared. He had lined the route from the station to the palace with his men; had prepared for every contingency so far as he could without calling out the guard. As the carriage, drawn by its four chestnut horses, moved slowly along the streets, his eyes under their overhanging eyelids were watching ahead, searching the crowd for symptoms of unrest.

Anger he saw in plenty, and suspicion. Scowling faces and frowning brows. But as yet there was no disorder. He sat with folded arms, unobtrusively in his uniform beside Karl, who wore civilian dress and looked less royal than perhaps he felt.

And Karl, too, watched the crowd, feeling his temper and fighting an indifference he did not feel. Olga Loschek had been right. He did not want trouble. More than that, he was of an age now to crave popularity. Many of the measures which had made him beloved in his own land had no higher purpose than this, the smiles of the crowd. So he watched and talked of indifferent things.

"It is ten years since I have been here," he observed, "but there are few changes."

"We have built no great buildings," said Mattich bluntly. "Wars have left us no money, majesty, for building."

That being a closed road, so to speak, Karl tried another. "The crown prince must be quite a lad," he experimented. "He was a babe in arms, then, but frail, I thought."

"He is sturdy now," the chancellor relapsed into watchfulness.

"Before I see the Princess Hedwig," Karl made another attempt. "It might be well to tell me how she feels about things. I would like to feel that the prospect is at least not disagreeable to her."

The chancellor was not listening. There was trouble ahead. It had come, then, after all. He muttered something behind his gray mustache. The horses stopped, as the crowd suddenly closed in front of them.

"Drive on!" he said angrily, and the coachman touched his whip to the horses. But they only reared, to be grasped at the bridles by hostile hands ahead.

Karl half rose from his seat.

"Sit still, majesty," said the chancellor. "It is the students. They will talk, that is all."

But it came perilously near to being a riot. Led by some students, pushed by others, the crowd surrounded the two carriages, first muttering, then yelling. A stone was hurled, and struck one of the horses. Another dealt the body of the carriage itself. A man with a handkerchief tied over the lower half of his face mounted the shoulders of two companions, and harangued the crowd. They wanted no friendship with Karl. They were to lose their national existence? He exhorted them madly through the handkerchief. A babel of noise, of swinging back and forth, of mounted police pushing through to surround the carriage, of cries and the dominating voices of the student demagogues. Then at last a semblance of order, low muttering, an escort of police with drawn revolvers around the carriage, and it moved ahead.

Through it all the chancellor had sat with folded arms. Only his livid face told of his fury. Karl, too, had sat impassive, picking at his small mustache. But, as the carriage moved on, he said: "A few moments ago I observed that there had been few changes. But there has been, I perceive, after all, a great change."

"One cannot judge the many by the few, majesty."

But Karl only raised his eyebrows. In his rooms, removing the dust of his journey, broken by the automobile trip across the mountains where the two railroads would some day meet, Karl reflected on the situation. A dual monarchy, one portion of it restless and revolutionary, was less desirable than the present peace and prosperity of Karl's land. And unrest was contagious. He might find himself in a difficult position.

A Babel of Noise, of Swinging Back and Forth.

He glanced about his rooms. In one of them Prince Hubert had met his death. It was well enough for Mattich to say the few could not speak for the many. It took but one man to do a murder, Karl reflected grimly.

But when he arrived for tea in the archduchess' white drawing room he was urbane and smiling. He kissed the hand of the archduchess and bent over Hedwig's with a flash of white teeth.

Then he saw Olga Loschek, and his smile stiffened. The countess came forward, curtsied, and as he extended his hand to her, touched it lightly with her lips. They were quite cold. For just an instant their eyes met.

It was, on the surface, an amiable and quiet tea party. Hedwig had taken up her position by a window, and was conspicuously silent. Behind her were the soft ring of silver against china, the countess' gay tones, Karl's suave ones, assuming gravity as he inquired as to his majesty's health; the archduchess' Annuncianta pretending a solicitude she did not feel. And all forced, all artificial.

"Grandmother," Hedwig whispered from her window to the austere old bronze figure in the place, "was it like this with you, at first? Did you shiver when he touched your hand? And doesn't it matter, after a year?"

"Very feeble," said the archduchess' voice, behind her, "but so brave—a lesson to us all."

"He has had a long and conspicuous career," Karl observed. "It is sad, but we must all come to it. I hope he will be able to see me."

"Hedwig!" said her mother, sharply, "your tea is getting cold."

Hedwig turned toward the room. Listlessness gave her an added dignity, a new charm. Karl's eyes flamed as he watched her. Even her coldness appealed to him. He had a feeling that the coldness was only a young girl's armor, that under it was a deeply passionate woman. The thought of seeing her come to deep, vibrant life in his arms thrilled him.

When he carried her tea to her, he bent over her. "Pleuse!" he said. "Try to like me. I—"

"I'm sorry," Hedwig said quickly. "Mother has forgotten the lemon."

Karl smiled and, shrugging his shoulders, fetched the lemon. "Right, now?" he inquired. "And aren't we going to have a talk together?"

"If you wish it, I dare say we shall," "Majesty," said Hilda, frowning into her tenebris. "I see a marriage for you." She ignored her mother's scowl, and lifted her cup to examine it.

"A marriage!" Karl joined her, and peered with mock anxiety at the tea grounds. "Strange that my fate should be confined in so small a compass! A happy marriage? Which am I?"

"The long yellow leaf. Yes, it looks happy. But you may be rather shocked when I tell you."

"Shocked?"

"I think," said Hilda, grinning, "that you are going to marry me."

"Delightful!"

"And we are going to have—"

"Hilda!" cried the archduchess fretfully. "Do stop that nonsense and let us talk. I was trying to recall, this morning," she said to Karl, "when you last visited us." She knew it quite well, but she preferred having Karl think she had forgotten. "It was, I believe, just before Hubert—"

"Yes," said Karl gravely, "just before."

"Otto was a baby then."

"A very small child. I remember that I was afraid to handle him."

"He is a curious boy, old beyond his years. Rather a little prig, I think. He has an English governess, and she has made him quite a little woman."

Karl laughed, but Hedwig flushed. "He is not that sort at all," she declared stoutly. "He is lonely and—and rather pathetic. The truth is that no one really cares for him, except—"

"Except Captain Larisch!" said the archduchess smoothly. "You and he, Hedwig, have done your best by him, surely."

The bit of byplay was not lost on Karl—the sudden stiffening of Hedwig's back, Olga's narrowed eyes. Olga had been right, then. Trust her for knowing facts when they were disagreeable. His eyes became set and watchful, hard, too, had any noticed. There were ways to deal with such a situation, of course. They were giving him this girl to secure their own safety, and she knew it. Had he not been so mad about her he might have pitied her, but he felt no pity, only a deep and resentful determination to get rid of Nikky, and then to warm her by his own fire. He might have to break her first. After that manner had many queens of Karl's come to the throne. He smiled behind his small mustache.

When tea was almost over, the crown prince was announced. He came in, rather nervously, with his hands thrust in his trousers pockets. He was very shiny with soap and water and his hair was still damp from parting. In his tailless black jacket, his long gray trousers, and his round Eton collar, he looked like a very anxious little schoolboy, and not royal at all.

Greetings over, and having requested that his tea be half milk, with four lumps of sugar, he carried his cup over beside Hedwig, and sat down on a chair. Followed a short silence, with the archduchess busy with the tea things, Olga Loschek watching Karl, and Karl intently surveying the crown prince. Ferdinand William Otto, who disliked a silence, broke it first.

"I've just taken off my winter flannels," he observed. "I feel very smooth and nice underneath."

Hilda giggled, but Hedwig reached over and stroked his arm. "Of course you do," she said gently.

"Nikky," continued Prince William Otto, stirring his tea. "Does not wear any flannels. Miss Brathwaite thinks he is very careless."

King Karl's eyes gleamed with amusement. He saw the infuriated face of the archduchess, and bent toward the crown prince with earnestness.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "since you have mentioned the subject, I do not wear any either. Your 'Nikky' and I seem most surprisingly to have the same tastes—about various things."

"Do you like dogs?" inquired the crown prince, much interested.

"Dogs! Why, yes. I have quite a number of dogs."

"I should think it would be nice to have just one dog, and be very fond of it. But I suppose they would eat a great deal. Do you believe in love at first sight?"

"Otto!" said the archduchess, extremely shocked.

He turned to her apologetically. "I was only trying to find out how many things he and Nikky agreed about," he explained. "Nikky believes in love at first sight. He says it is the only real kind of love, because love isn't a thing you think out. You only feel it."

The archduchess met Karl's eyes. "You see!" she said.

"But it is sound doctrine," Karl observed, bending forward and with a slanting glance at Hedwig. "I quite agree with him again. And this friend of yours, he thinks love is the only thing in the world, I dare say?"

"Well, he thinks a great deal of it. But he says that love of country comes first, before anything else."

The archduchess glanced at Hedwig curiously. The girl had closed her eyes, and was sitting detached and pale. She would have liked to box her ears. Karl was no fool, and there was talk enough. He would hear it, of course.

"Tell us about your pilgrimage, Otto," she suggested.

"There ain't gonna be no we."

A milk dealer of New York was consulted in his early days by a friend in the milk trade.

"Why not?" the dealer asked.

"Oh, such things ain't in my line."

"No," let it stay. It doesn't make any more difference to the actual test than the electoral college."

MAXWELL

F.O.B. DETROIT

There is inflexible logic in the fixing of that price for the Maxwell closed cars.

The purpose of the Maxwell builders was to strike the MIDDLE LINE of absolute value.

They have done so with scientific accuracy.

The Maxwell closed cars have grace, beauty, comfort, efficiency, durability, economy and standard equipment.

But, if built to sell for less than $1195 one or the other of these would be lacking.

On the other hand, for a higher price you could get only larger size or fancier furnishings—not any greater VALUE or finer "class."

That is what we mean by "the Middle Line."

War Crosses For Two Make Mauperin No Less Surly But His Target Remembers Hun-back Ride

TRUTH TALES OF THE GREAT WAR—VI.

THE SURLY MAUPERIN—PART 2.

By Gerald Brandon.

"Mauperin," said the officer, "to-night you will go on a confidential mission with Curt. You will obey him implicitly in all things during the duration of this mission, for he has been temporarily invested with the rank of functional corporal. Do you understand?"

"Yes, my lieutenant," mumbled Mauperin, almost speechless with rage at the idea of being under his "nanny's" orders.

That night Mauperin reported to Curt, who handed him an automatic revolver and ordered him to leave rifle and bayonet behind.

Followed closely by Mauperin, Curt retraced the path he had taken that day. When they arrived at the crest of the hill he beckoned to his follower and explained his plans.

"The captain wishes a prisoner. He needs information which only a prisoner can give. He does not want to start an attack or a bombardment if it can be avoided, so we are to use trickery instead of force."

"When I was up here today I took note of the positions of the German sentries. See there in the corner of the wire entanglements. That gray spot. That is a steel shield that protects them. Only their heads show above it. It is necessary to lure one of them out of there. I will do it and you must grab him when I whistle. Grab him by the throat and squeeze tight enough to stop him from giving the alarm. But not tight enough to kill him. For we need him to talk after we get back."

"I will help you. As soon as we have him, hurry him to the road over there, where we will be sheltered by the walls of the cut. Remember now. When I whistle, grab him. He must not use your revolver except at the last extremity. Do you understand?"

"Two shapes rose up from the ground and while one of them took a strangle hold on his throat the other gagged him with a blue woolen sash."

MAUPERIN GROWLS, BUT HE SUBCUMBES TO FLATTERY

"It is a dangerous game," grumbled Mauperin.

"Why do you think I asked for you?" responded Curt placidly.

"Thanks for the compliment. But how are we going to get close enough to grab him?"

"We will disguise ourselves as corpses."

From the German trench a din of voices and clatter of pewter arose.

"Listen," said Curt. "It is their supper hour. You know the boches. When they have a piece of sausage between their teeth they forget everything else. Now is our chance to creep down among these corpses that lie in the wire in front of their post. Oh! I was about to forget. If I do not come back tell the captain that my notebook is in my knapsack, and to send it to my folks. How about you? Any message to be delivered in case the boches get you?"

"The boches won't get me," answered Mauperin surlily.

"All right, come on."

And the two men crept silently toward the dark, motionless shapes that had been soldiers of France like themselves, and whose fate they might share.

OTTO WAS SICK AND TIRED OF CORPSE COMPANIONS

Otto Sutzbach, soldier of the 13th regiment Jäger zu Fuss, was in no pleasant mood. He was sick and tired of standing guard in his outpost, condemned to eternal vigilance over nothing at all. From his post he could see nothing but a round dozen corpses which the French had left there two months before, the last time they had had the foolhardiness to attack. They knew better now those Franzosen, than to come within reach of the German guns. And as he munched his K K bread and leberwurst, Otto mechanically counted over the corpses. They were old friends, those twelve bodies that lay there. They had not been buried and it was pleasant to look on them and curse them as enemies of the fatherland.

Suddenly Otto started to his feet and rubbed his eyes. Had he counted wrong? Was there fourteen corpses there instead of twelve? He counted twice, and then called his comrade's attention to the miracle. "Yes, there were without question two extra bodies in front of the wire."

"Go and tell the herr-leutenant," Otto bade his companion. "I will go out and look into the matter."

When laying barbed wire, a passage, tortuous as the way out of a labyrinth, is always left clear. Otto, winding his way through the thorny entanglements, soon reached the group of black shadows that lay at white witnesses to German marksmanship.

YES, THERE WERE FOURTEEN BODIES INSTEAD OF TWELVE

There they were, fourteen bodies, twelve of which were lifeless and two either masquerading enemies or figments of his imagination. Otto chuckled. He was not at all afraid of ghosts or of Frenchmen either. He advanced toward the nearest corpse and plunged his bayonet into its chest.

The steel came out again clean as before. Frozen corpses do not bleed. Otto applied his test to the second corpse. Identical result. However, before he could withdraw his bayonet two shapes rose up from the ground and while one of them took a strangle hold on his throat the other gagged him with a blue woolen sash.

Otto had started to struggle, but when he saw the blue sash he decided that it was safest to surrender to the inevitable. He had recognized the sash as the insignia of the foreign legion.

The two men with their prisoner ran at top speed across the open to the road which, with its deep-cut banks, offered shelter. By this time the alarm had been given and the German trench was lined with men who emptied their magazines at the three shadows that zig-zagged their way southward.

As they dropped into the road, ten feet below, Curt let out a cry of pain. "My leg! I have broken it, I think." Sure enough, the American had snapped his ankle and could not rise.

"That is just like you," grumbled Mauperin. "Break your ankle in a ten-foot jump. What are you made of anyhow? See what all your washing and brushing does to you. It softens your bones."

MAUPERIN REFUSES TO CARRY OUT ONE ORDER

"Shut up and take the prisoner to our lines," ordered Curt. "I will try to crawl back myself."

Mauperin grunted, but made no move to obey. Instead, he began to unwrap his sash from around the head of the German.

"What are you doing?" cried the puzzled Curt.

"You will see in a minute," answered his subordinate.

"Answer at once or I will shoot you!" threatened Curt, drawing his revolver.

Mauperin paid no attention to the menacing revolver, but ungagged the German and tied him around the middle with his sash. Then in an impressive pantomime he made the prisoner pick up the helpless Curt and start with him toward the French lines, which they reached without further mishap.

They evoked a roar of laughter as they appeared. Curt, the bewildered German "piggy-back," while Mauperin drove him onward with menacing revolver, keeping him in the right path by tugging on one of the other end of the sash, like children do when they play horse.

Curt got the croix de guerre, and so did Mauperin. Some people think that the German should also have been decorated for bringing Curt in under fire.

Mauperin is as surly and provocative as ever. He delights in picking on Curt, but the American never gets back at him any more. He just lets him talk and answers with an affectionate smile.

At the Public Meeting last Friday night a representative Janesville audience crowded Myers' Opera House to the doors. The opponents of Commission Government were asked to come there and present their arguments for discussion. They were assured of a courteous hearing. No one with a cause to plead could desire a better opportunity to reach hundreds of our voters. Yet no one appeared for them. If those gentlemen who are so privately advocating that we go back again to ward aldermen had good arguments to present to that fine gathering, and nothing to conceal, why did they stay away?

Commission Government

Have other cities realized the business-like and economical rule of Commission government? In the last twelve years nearly 400 cities in this country, embracing some 9,000,000 people—about one-fifth of all who live in cities—have discarded their aldermen and adopted Commission government. Look at the following list compiled by our State University Municipal Reference Bureau. Those with a star also employ an expert City Manager.
